

34TH ANNUAL UNDERGRADUATE Philosophy & Religion CONFERENCE

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 16 2024

Baldwin Hall 114 • 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Conference to be held in person • Free and open to the public

Sponsored by the Philosophy & Religion Program in the Social Sciences and Human Inquiry Department

Keynote Address
1:30 p.m.

“Speciesism
Reconsidered: Do
We Have Stronger
Moral Obligations
to Other Human Beings Because
They Are Members of Our Species?”

JOSH
MUND,
*Assistant Professor of Philosophy and Religion,
Truman
State University*

Josh is an ethicist whose research focuses on human interactions with animals. In recent years he's written about defenses of humane animal agriculture, especially the view that farm animals would not exist without the practice of animal agriculture. His current projects investigate whether death (if it is free from pain) can be bad for animals, and whether pet owners should be morally troubled by the origin of their pets' food.